These faces shouldn't be missing

—BUT THEY SOON WILL BE

SOME of the familiar star names will be missing from the film posters in the next few months. British film producers do not seem to be able to find the right parts for many of our best known actresses. It is not only in Hollywood apparently where the stars are sitting around and thinking of anything except making a picture.

Three names headline the story in London: Pat Roc; Sally Gray; and Margaret Johnston. PAT ROC: Eighteen months ago she was one of the hardest worked stars in British pictures. She was making three films at a time— and laughed if you mentioned a holiday.

Now in her London flat Miss Roc is beginning to realise that she will be having a holiday until September or October. There is no new film for her until then. She has not worked on a picture since she walked out of "London Belongs to Me" four months ago. That was by agreement with the producer— she wasn't suspended.

Maybe Miss Roc was foolish, but she thought the part was too dowdy for her. She wants to make a comedy in modern dress and will deny that she is fussy. She just realises that she cannot go on being "the other woman" in pictures for much longer.

CASE TWO

SALLY GRAY: Miss Gray has the personality and the ability to play romantic comedy roles. She has never really been given the chance. Her three-year—contract ends—this year.

Since she finished "Mark of Cain" last summer she has had nothing. There are no plans to star her this year.

In the three years she was under contract, two of her best films, "Green for Danger" and "They Made Me a Fugitive," were made for "outside" companies. One year she was suspended for refusing to play Stewart Granger's film mother. Said Miss Gray: "I'm not that old yet."

CASE THREE

MARGARET JOHNSTON is another example. Miss Johnston brought everyone running with her performance in "Rake's Progress" in 1945, and again in "Man About the House" last year. Since then—nothing. The film men who rushed around waving contracts have disappeared. No one cares to explain why a young girl with the ability should have been completely ignored for 12 months. Now tired of waiting for film scripts, Margaret Johnston is going back to the stage to play Elizabeth in "The Barrets of Wimpole Street."

Her performance in that will bring the film boys round to the stage door again.

There are other names you can add to those three. What picture plans are there for Phyllis Calvert, Colin Johnson, or the newcomer, Siobhan McKenna? We need all our stars. There should be no missing faces.

PRODUCERS' EYES TURN TO ROME

By RALPH DIGHTON

DEFEAT of Communists in the general election in Italy has spurred plans of American producers to make films in Italy.

Producer Edward Small popularised Italy as a place for expenditure of frozen funds with "Cagliostro." He plans to follow this film with "Clementine," also to be made in Rome.

Gregor Rabinovitch, who has already left for Rome, will film "Tales of Hoffman" and "Aida" there. He plans to do several other films based on operas, all for Columbia.

Benedict Bogeaus is considering production in Italy of at least one feature this year, and has two more stories suitable for filming there. Hal Wallis has "September" slated for filming in Italy, if he is successful in negotiations to borrow Ann Todd from J. Arthur Rank.

John Farrow, Carl Leserman and Cliff Reid, who are working on "Son of Man," a story based on the life of Christ, have indicated they would like to shoot it in Rome. The production unit for 20th Century-Fox picture, "Prince of Foxes," is already in Italy.

LANA TURNER SAYS 'I AM THE LIGHT RELIEF FROM COMMUNISM'

by DAVID LEWIN

LONDON, May 13. MISS LANA TURNER, the latest Mrs Henry Topping, Jun., opened her eyes wide and said in that dramatic, frank way which all the best acting schools teach: "I am a woman with a price on my head."

The latest Mr Lana Turner said nothing. They had arrived in London last night, 16 days after the most sensational wedding Hollywood had seen for years.

But it turned out that when 28-year-old Lana and 37-year-old Henry were married it was a pretty quiet affair, really.

"Disappointing, I would call it," said Mr Turner's associate, Mr Albert Broccoli. "There were in fact, only ten guests, and the food was lavish only by your English standards."

Mrs Topping ("Thank you for calling me that") took up the story. "You've no idea how ghastly it has all been. Oh, Mr Lewin, I have been the target of malicious gossip. I guess I know why. It is as a result of the war and all this talk about Communism. People wanted something else to talk about so they turned to me." A pause. . . . A smile: "I don't see why all this should be the price of fame."

It appeared that the £7,500 trousseau was a slight exaggeration, too. "Just a few dresses that is all," said Mrs Topping. "Maybe ten dresses and four suits and ten pairs of shoes."

Of course it wasn't that she could not afford to buy things. M.G.M. are paying her about £50,000 a year. "You see, Mr Lewin, this is all an exciting holiday for me. I shall just love seeing your England, all the history and all that."

Just a holiday? . . . Just a well-timed coincidence, too, that Mrs Topping had arrived 24 hours before the midjet car racing season (partly promoted by her husband) opened in London. She had agreed to help out by making personal appearances at the track.

Her first personal appearance—last night—resulted in a chase through the Savoy Hotel corridors. Reporters had been invited for "a conference" at 6 p.m. They were then told to return at 6.45. They did. "Come back in 15 minutes," was the next instruction. . . . A door opened, Miss Turner burst through with a bright "Hello," and bustled down the corridor. Furious, the reporters chased after her—but they didn't catch her.

Later there were apologies, and two reporters were persuaded to stay. She didn't say much.

ROME GETS ITS CAVIARE—BOUGHT WITH U.S. DOLLARS

By SAM WHITE

ONLY the tattered remains of election posters now serve to remind Italians of that week his history when they enjoyed the undivided attention of the entire world.

The operative word is "enjoyed," for there is little doubt that the vision of themselves as arbiters of the world's destinies appealed enormously to all the theatrical instincts of the Italian character.

Briefly they enjoyed every moment of it, and now, while the world's applause still rings gratefully in their ears, they half regret that both the Constitution and the very size of the Christian Democrat majority make another election unlikely for at least another five years.

The subject of the Italian elections lends itself to a not altogether ill-founded cynicism. Did the Communists ever really stand a chance of getting more than 40 percent of the vote?

Did not the Government overplay the Communist danger in order to secure considerable economic and diplomatic concessions from the United States, and the West?

Romans are the last people in the world to fall to appreciate a fine piece of Machiavellian diplomacy and a current quip is that if the elections had been postponed for another fortnight Italy would have been given back all its colonies. Whatever justification there is for these doubts and questionings the fact remains that Italy is now the bright-eyed favourite of the U.S. State Department. As such, she shall not want—for dollars.

She will remain comparatively prosperous though bankrupt. A walk down Rome's fashionable Via Vittorio Veneto is an eye-opener. Here are the most elegantly attired men and women in the world. (The New Look swarms every woman.) Here are ice-creams made from real cream supporting a toasting pyramid of whipped cream. Here are shops and restaurants bulging with every known luxury and delicacy.

Even caviare is imported from Russia via the U.S.A. and paid for in hard dollars. Some impressions are somewhat ill-balanced, however. Italy, far from being prosperous, is in fact desperately poor.

Without large-scale agricultural reforms and vast hydro-electric and irrigation schemes, Italy is doomed to live on American charity. Will Premier De Gasperi tackle these problems? There are doubts, for this man has too many masters and among them are those who most effectively bar the road to reform.

But, to those who have the money, Rome offers a life completely unchanged by war. Over the coffee cups and while taking cocktails at the Ambasciatori, there is no lack of spicily gossip. Edda Ciano was in town recently, and everyone who fawned on her during her years of power cut her dead.

She is now in Capri and intends to re-marry. The orchestra in Capri's leading night club is a little behind the times—every time Edda enters it plays softly the Fascist hymn, Giovinezza.

Edda is said to be a secret supporter of the new postwar Italian Fascist which calls itself the Italian Social Movement.

Evident everywhere is the boundless vitality and inventive genius of the Italian people. War damage has been miraculously repaired; shops bulge with goods it is neither possible to sell at home nor to export; new inventions are being patented.

One is a motor-cycle which looks like a scooter and seats three people comfortably. And the warm Italian sun shines impartially on rich man, poor man, beggar and spiv.

HOW AMERICANS ELECT THEIR PRESIDENTS

Continuing a timely and informative article by

William R. Sears

United Press Staff Correspondent

ANY native-born American, 35 years' old or older, who has lived in the United States 14 years, is eligible to be President.

But there is more to it than just wanting to.

In practice, one of the biggest qualifications is the aspirant's ability to "get votes."

Candidates, of course, do not spring from nowhere. By and large, candidates have made politics and public service a career and work their way up.

Intermediate steps are state governor, U. S. Senator, U. S. Representative or some high appointive post in the Presidential Cabinet.

The medium for this progression is the political party.

The Democratic and Republican parties are the media whereby, through organized campaigning, a candidate is put across.

Political parties require money, and for various reasons, ranging from devotion to principles to vested interest, individuals contribute various sums of money to the election chests of each party.

THE parties also require field workers, both paid and volunteer, who bring to the electorate at meetings and at the door-step the various party principles.

At any time, an individual can go into the business of boosting himself for the Presidential nomination.

On the Republican side, there are several individuals seeking the nomination. One is the Governor of New York, Thomas E. Dewey, whom Roosevelt defeated in 1944.

Most spectacular to rise in Republican ranks is former Minnesota Governor Harold E. Stassen. He has spent most of his time since leaving the Navy stumping the country seeking support.

In addition there are Senator Robert A. Taft of Ohio, Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, Governor Earl Warren of California and Speaker of the House of Representatives, Joseph W. Martin, and General Douglas MacArthur.

About the beginning of the election year, the various candidates of both parties begin mustering support. One by one they announce their willingness to run, and their adherents gather about them.

State Primary

THE best means of testing popularity is the state primary. Procedure varies from state to state. But in the cases of both parties, the actual naming of the candidate is done at the party's national convention. Both are held in June this year, both will be held in Philadelphia.

But during the spring and early summer, primary voting takes place. This year, the first great test was in Wisconsin. At the Republican primary election there, Stassen staged a surprising victory.

This had no official significance. But it was illustrative of how Wisconsin Republicans felt about the

TWO OTHER POSSIBLES

Joseph W. Martin, Speaker of the House, and

Earl Warren, Governor of California. Both are Republicans

various candidates who entered. The result means that when over 1,000 delegates to the Republican convention begin their balloting, those from Wisconsin will be pledged to support Stassen. Their support is limited to only that length of time that it appears he has a chance of being named the candidate. Should support for another candidate begin to develop on subsequent balloting, Wisconsin delegates may decide to shift the support.

Stassen staged subsequent victories in Nebraska and other states. Meanwhile, other candidates like Dewey and Martin and Taft and Vandenberg received scattered support.

The big test will come at the national convention.

There, party leaders and candidates and other dignitaries make deals and negotiate for each other's support behind the scenes. It may take several ballottings before a candidate emerges triumphant. In 1940, Wendell Willkie captured the convention coming from virtual obscurity. This happens when the convention is deadlocked, and the compromise nominee is known as a "dark horse."

The national conventions, held in the summer, are usually noisy affairs, with the delegations from states all over the union appearing with signs and placards showing their choices. Sometimes delegations appear in the costumes of farmers or cowboys, befitting their state. There are brass bands and hoopla and fund-making and merriment.

Once the convention settles down to serious business, it devotes itself to naming the Presidential slate: a candidate for President and one for Vice-President.

Geographical considerations usually result in one man coming from one section of the country and the other from a distant sector. The idea here is not to alienate voters by presenting choices too sectional in origin.

There were 28 specific changes in domestic policy sought by progressive, labour and agrarian movements which found political expression in minority parties. By 1920, both majority parties had adopted 24 of these, while the minority parties founded to advocate them passed out of existence. The case of Henry Wallace includes some elements of this pattern.

Another pattern involves the dissatisfaction of some elements within the party. The case of the Southern Democrats threatening to "bolt" over the civil rights issue comes in here.

In either case, when both factions put up candidates, the still united major party has benefited from the split and won. In 1912, when ex-President Theodore Roosevelt led his Progressives against the conservative wing of his party and against the Democrats, the Democrats installed Woodrow Wilson; but by 1916, the differences had ironed out and the Republicans were again united, although defeated at the polls.

What success Henry Wallace's bid for the Presidency will meet cannot accurately be foretold. Some regular sampling organisations have quizzed the public, and his popularity has varied in many regions. One group, on the basis of its samplings, estimated his party might poll 5,000,000 votes.

Other Parties

THIS could do little for him except, if centred favourably, return a few Wallace-backed candidates to Congress.

Perhaps the support by the Communist Party in the United States—a numerically weak but vociferous and active minority party—has hurt Wallace most, the merits or drawbacks of his platform notwithstanding.

American history shows the radical parties always to have failed to poll a million votes. The closest to come to that figure was Eugene V. Debs, the Socialist nominee in 1920, who polled 919,710 votes.

In addition to Wallace's third party, a force of recognisable influence is the American Labour Party. This party, a consistent champion of Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal policies, has itself been rendered by a right-left split, the leftists favouring Wallace.

Also, there are various parties having no influence nationally but which, nevertheless, propose candidates every year.

Their platforms range from prohibition (of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages) to Old Aged pension schemes and socialism of varying shades and degrees.

One observer has estimated that in the 40-year period up to 1912,

WHITEHALL'S 10,000 SNOOPERS

By ERIC BENNETT

I HAVE been snooping into the snoopers—the 10,000 odd Government officials earning between them £80,000 and £100,000 a week in salaries, who have the right to inspect private house or business premises without a search warrant.

There are two classes of these snoopers who come most prominently into the public eye: the Ministry of Food's enforcement officers and the Board of Trade's investigation officers.

Chief of the Ministry of Food's posse is Captain H. J. Murphy. He is a tough proposition. He entered the Royal Navy as a boy of 16 in 1909.

His deputy, Mr. A. Monro, has a salary on the scale of £800-£1,100, plus allowances.

Under them and the assistant director (salary on the same scale but no allowances) are four chief investigating officers, who share £3,335 a year between them.

No. 1 man is ex-Chief Inspector Barker, of Scotland Yard, who took a prominent part in the arrest of Browne, murderer of Police Constable Gutteridge.

A few days ago he helped to organise a less sensational coup the snoop swoop on the cargo liner Palana in London Docks.

There are 751 food enforcement inspectors, men and women, scattered throughout the country.

MANY EX-POLICEMEN

The men you can usually pick out by their broad shoulders and heavy tread, for the favourite recruiting ground for them is among ex-policemen.

And the best chance of becoming a female snoop is held by policemen's daughters.

Average pay is £8 10s. a week, and they get out-of-pocket expenses. The Board of Trade has three kinds of snoopers. The first is concerned with consumer rationing offences, coupons, and what is generally known as the black market.

They are headed by ex-Superintendent George Vandell, formerly one of Scotland Yard's Big Five. His salary is £1,138 a year.

Under him is a deputy chief at £224 a year, and two assistant chiefs who earn a shade over £12 a week. There are 80 investigating officers with salaries ranging from £6 6s. a week to £8 10s. a week.

Since they have to deal not only with technical offences, but with coupon forgeries, stolen property, and large-scale frauds, they are nearly all men with considerable police experience.

Second class of Board of Trade sleuths are the accountants. There are 82 of them, all qualified professional men, and their salaries range from £475 to £950 a year.

THEN THEY POUNCE

They lie in wait until somebody tips the department off that a firm is engaged or likely to be engaged in fishy transactions. Then they pounce on the books.

Scattered throughout the country are the investigating officials of the price control committees. There are 100 of them, divided into two grades.

The second-class snoopers get from £0 6s. to £8 5s. a week. A Grade I man gets anything from £0 6s. to £11 11s.

Their job is to catch out the people who overcharge, and they are allowed out-of-pocket expenses for purchases made in the course of duty.

The Board of Trade is particularly proud of the fact that, with such a small staff of investigators, it has secured convictions carrying a total of 200 years' imprisonment and £1,500,000 worth of fines since they began operations in 1941.

PETROL SPOTTERS

The Board of Trade solicitor also conducts prosecutions for the Ministry of Fuel and Power, which employs a modest staff of 85 enforcement officers at salaries between £425 and £600.

It is their job to spot misuse of petrol and breaches of coal allocation or lighting regulations.

A farmer may be plagued by Ministry of Agriculture research officers or inspectors from the animal health division.

Any employer is liable to incursions from factory inspectors, labour supply inspectors, and wages inspectors, who form the team, more than 2,000 strong, of the Ministry of Labour.

Housewives are the prey of a different class of snoopers, who come round to make a survey for one Ministry or another.

The investigators—most of them are women—are usually employed on a part-time basis. A normal rate of pay is a guinea a day.

ATOM GIVE-AWAY STARTLES

by CHAPMAN PINCHER

INFORMATION which may save the Russians years of work in the development of atomic power for industrial and military purposes has been published in an American magazine.

It gives facts, figures, and formulas about plutonium—the explosive used in the latest atom bombs.

The closely packed 10-page report—prepared by Dr. E. C. Harvey, of the Canadian Atomic Energy Station—describes in detail the basis of the method of making the plutonium which devastated Nagasaki.

VERY SURPRISED

A leading atomic scientist in Britain said: "This goes much further than anything yet published. I am surprised, very surprised indeed."

Another said: "The details given were graded as a vital part of the secret know-how of bomb production."

But in London, the Ministry of Supply issued this statement: "The details have been released by agreement between British, American, and Canadian security chiefs."

This is the second official large-scale disclosure of atomic information. Immediately after the war, the U.S. Government released the Smyth Report, giving a mass of facts about the Mark I atomic explosive, uranium 235, which is far more difficult to make than, plutonium.

SINCE international relations worsened, the Smyth Report has been described in the U.S. Senate as "a gross breach of security."

Criticism was largely allayed when it was pointed out that Russia was far more likely to concentrate on research to find a way of making plutonium than to set up the huge installations needed to make uranium 235.

While the Smyth Report gave away nothing about the chemistry of plutonium, the new disclosure in the magazine Nucleonics gives away most of it.

The evidence of the Canadian spy trials in 1946 showed that details of plutonium manufacture were definitely what the Russian agents wanted most.

One explanation given was that the security chiefs believe that Russia already has this information, either as a result of the leakage or through the work of her own scientists.

But they cannot be sure of this, as the Russians are not publishing any results of their atomic research.

TWO VIEWS

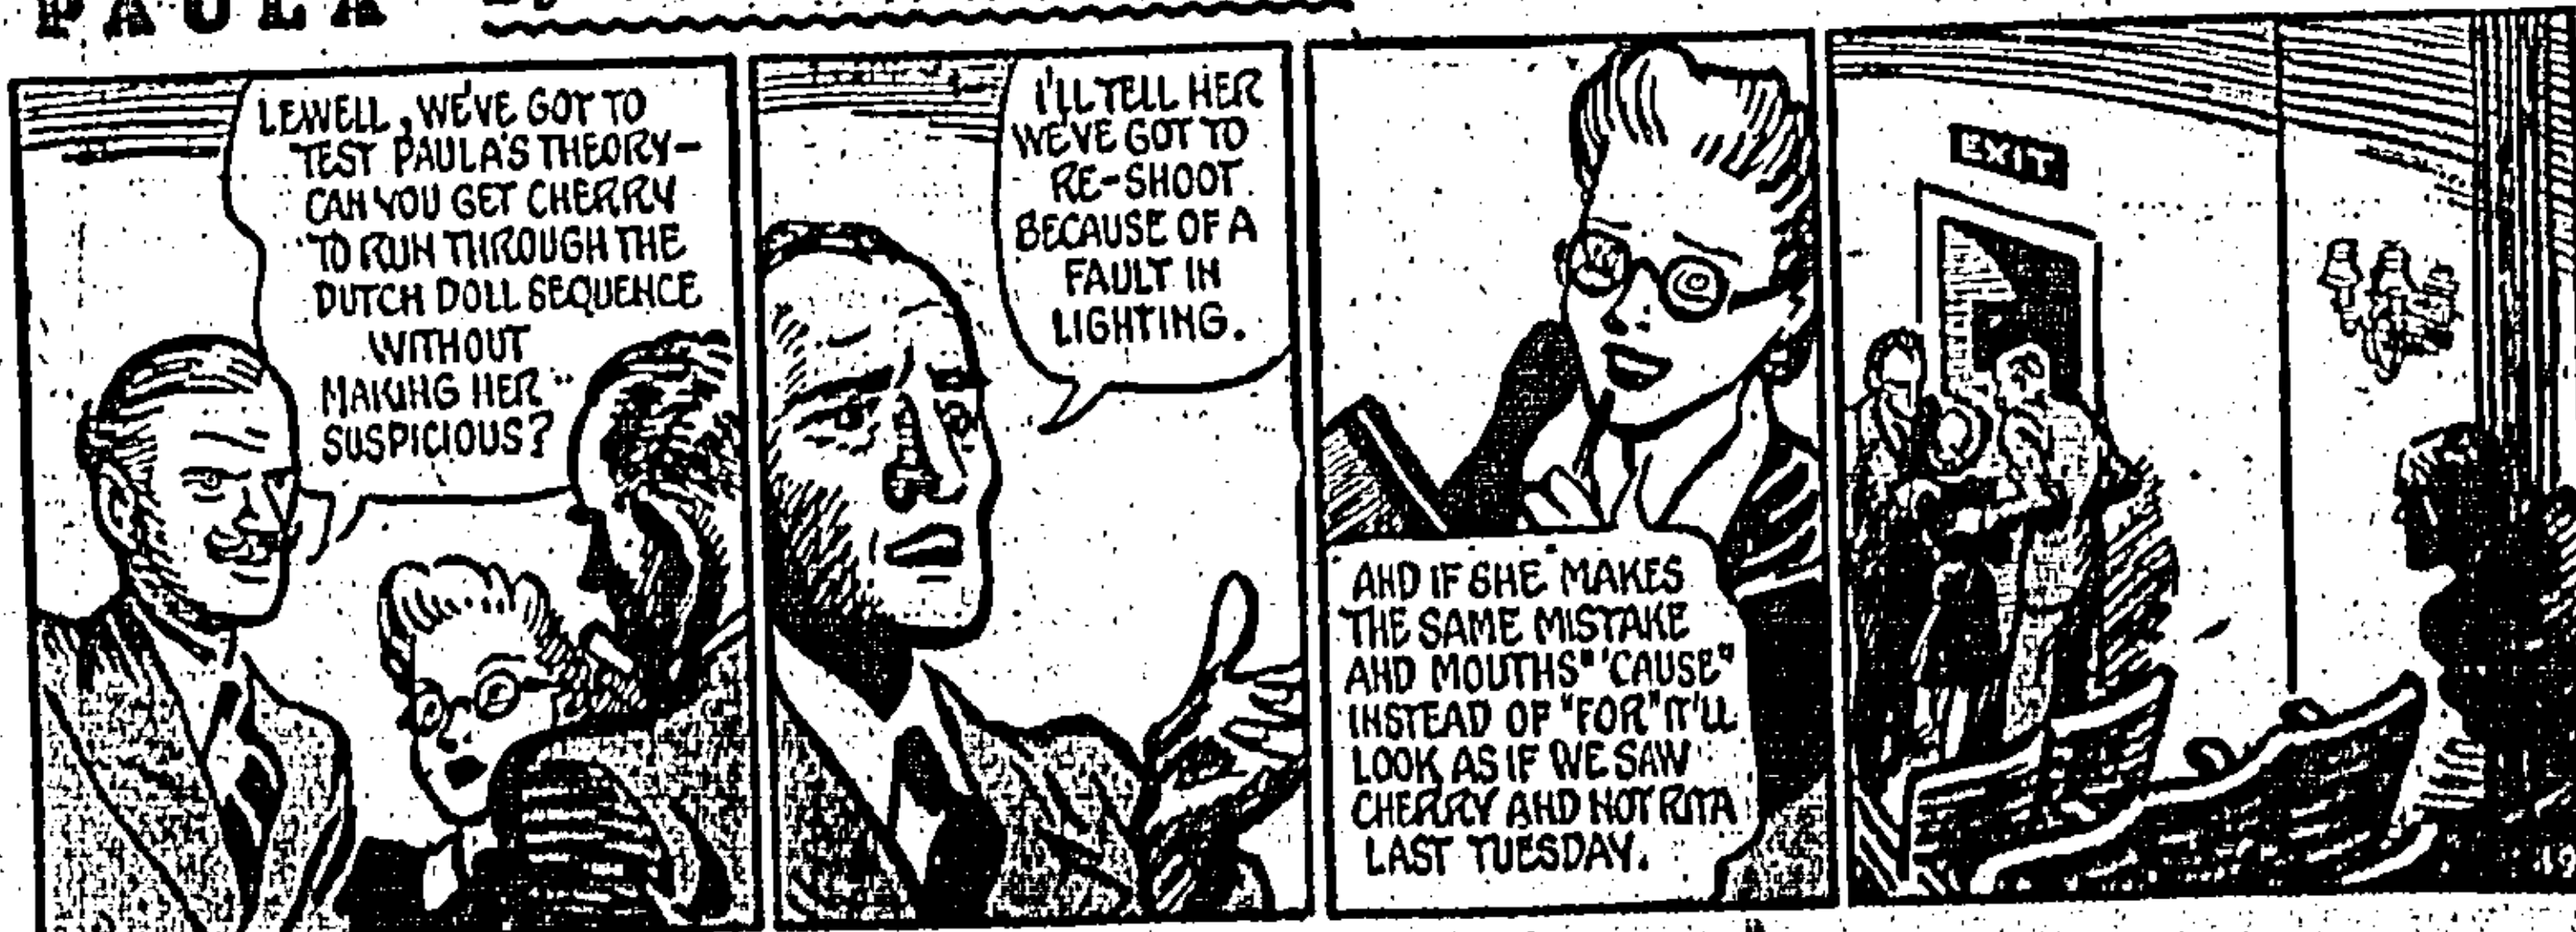

AMONG scientists with whom I talked were some who applauded the publication of this plutonium report.

They were chiefly men who believe that Britain should publicly renounce atomic armaments, as France has done. They believe that the open abandonment of atomic weapons might have an immense moral effect on the Kremlin.

But the defence scientists—those who were most startled by the news—believe that until international agreement to outlaw atomic weapons is reached no more details applicable to atom-bomb production should be released.

A Man Darns—and Women Crowd Round

ONE of the biggest draws at the Olympia section of the British Industries Fair was an elderly man who spent the day darning. Crowds of women watched him at work.

He is Mr Edgar Chesstok, of Barby Road, North Kensington, and he was demonstrating a patent darning gadget which he invented himself.

"I'm a grandfather, and do all my own darning at home," he said.

Eighty percent of the darners produced at his factory in Manchester are for export, but he says that sometimes the darning can be found in London shops.

He invented it during the 1914-18 war when he was a prisoner. "It took years of study to perfect it," he said.

Many Orders

"Now it is being shown at the BIF for the first time. I have booked many orders from American, Canadian and European buyers."

Although Mr. Chesstok darns expertly with his gadget, he admits that he is incapable of mending a sock or stocking without it.

Other things seen at the Fair included:

Tennis racket with stainless steel frame which need not be kept in a press.—£3 5s. 6d. or £5 12s. strung with tournament gut. There is also a badminton racket with a steel frame, and a squash racket is in preparation.

New and inexpensive plastic toys, among them a small helicopter, and a doll's carpet sweeper which picks up dust.

Book-shaped handbag with holder for a race card, pocket for a betting book, and a mirror and compartment for powder and lipstick—about £5 retail.

Leather notecase which expands to take 100 notes.

Portable gas poker with gas cylinder—£2 10s.

Portable gas cylinder cooker, for use on picnics, or in service flat where there is no kitchen.

ELIZABETH'S HAT

To match her new-length coat, Princess Elizabeth wore this pale blue hat trimmed with white flowers, bow and veil.

She was on a visit to the Church Army's Marylebone hostel.

SOME women fancy that, with enough money to spend on costly fabrics, expensive cosmetics, snappy shoes, all the little do-dads they are bound to look well.

The wise woman knows better. She goes in for self-analysis. She knows her good points and her poor ones. Clothes that may satisfy one woman won't be accepted by her at all.

She has definite ideas as to individuality in dress. She wants to look up-topsy, but she does not want to look like everybody else.

To dress well is something of an art. You have to know about lines and colour as well as about yourself. One woman who makes a big mistake is the old timer who says, "I don't care about styles; I wear what is becoming." She overlooks the fact, plain to any sensible woman, that if a hat or frock or haidro is completely out of the mode it is no longer becoming. You have to keep moving.

One must dress to type. One woman can use heavy eye shadows, Joak chile, lovely, interesting. Another, less exotic, will appear silly with pigment on her eyelids. One must know about these things.

NEW FABRICS KEEP THEM GUESSING

COTTON, supporting summertime player in fashion, is being given the chance of an all-the-year-round star part—first producers dreams come true.

British cottons are being groomed and polished into fabrics that look like silk, jersey, taffeta, velvet, organdio—anything, in fact, but cotton.

The only garments that seem to be made of the unpretentious cotton we used to know are lingerie, like the camisole and petticoat set (3) above. This can be made in starched white, black or coloured cotton, trimmed with cotton broderie ruffles and slotted ribbons.

The wide starched petticoat gives bulk to full New Look skirts.

A new formal cotton frock (1) is suitable for town and restaurant wear. It is one of the new Fabricade dresses, designed by Joy Ricardo, in dark blue and white striped cotton, with a white organdio collar. Similar cotton organdio is used for the puff-crowned hat with a peaked navy straw brim.

Another new formal cotton dress (2) will be popular for garden parties, races, and other semi-dress occasions. Compromise on formality is reached in this off-and-on the shoulder dress by Roelclit and Chapman. Of fine white cotton patterned black, it has tiny puffed sleeves, these and the full skirt emphasized with narrow black velvet ribbon.

The 1948 version of an all-time classic (4) is a button-through cotton summer frock. By Linzi, the dress of printed cotton pique has a ruffled Juliet collar and ruffled pockets.

JOY GANNON, nineteen-year-old British tennis starlet, leads off the parade....

SECOND SET... out of court

RIGHT for the Week-end! This page is inviting under-25-year-old sports celebrities to analyse their week-end wardrobes. From each wardrobe Robb and Anne Edwards will select sound ideas on week-end dressing—based on the experience and the advice of girls who are famous both for the same they play and the clothes they play it in.

Beginning today with JOY GANNON, 19-year-old, blonde tennis starlet, whose road to stardom began when she beat Kay Stammers a year ago, and then deputised for her on the tour to South Africa.

HER PLAN FOR PLAY: While sharkskin because its creases are easily ironed out, because it shows no perspiration marks, and because dust slides easily off it.

She has one basic design for all her tennis frocks varies each with a ribbon of colour round the hem, matched to her socks and cardigan. Planted back and front from neck to waist below the hips. The open neck, which buttons back in hot weather, has revers too small to get in her way.

Main advantages of the outfit: It is roomy enough for the most energetic game. At the same time it looks fresh and neat because the plants are too tightly pressed to get out of order except in play.

—AND OFF THE COURT: As a stand-by for all other occasions on a short visit, Joy takes a smart New Look dress and jacket of light material. With the jacket the dress makes an all-day outfit; without the jacket it is suitable for a cocktail party or informal dinner.

Film Stars' New Hat Parade

By PATRICIA CLARY

HOLLYWOOD may have to widen its doors to let the movie stars through. The ladies are already staggering under beflowered hats big enough to shield a small mob of autograph hunters.

Half of Hollywood oled and shed and got out its cheque books while the other half modelled the beauties at Kenneth Hopkins' salon, where everybody who is anybody gets her bonnet.

Bonnets, bretons, or berets, they nearly all were big and all were flatteringly feminine. They were huge straw cartwheels with flower-laden brims, sometimes filled around the face with flowers, or like phonograph records and halo hats entirely of flowers swathed in tulle.

Flowers Small

The largest hat of all, modelled by Ruth Hussey, was a black cart-wheel straw trimmed with spring flowers.

Nearly all the flowers were small and multicoloured. The only rose shown was a headlight on a pink straw veiled with black lace. There was plenty of black lace on Hopkins' other hats. Sometimes it was clustered in the black like a bustle. Hopkins said those were good for girls who wear their hair up.

Long chiffon scarfs trailed from both suit and evening hats. One royal blue bonnet, worn with a suit, had a bright green chiffon scarf with royal blue net insets.

The hat Gloria Swanson bought had one of the most flattering silhouettes, a wide brim that rippled in front. It was caramel straw with a black ribbon and caramel veil.

Kay Cameron, model, wore a white cartwheel as wide as her shoulders with white and yellow blossoms around the edge of the brim.

White Straw Bonnet

Marilyn Nash, actress, showed a white straw coal-scuttle bonnet with white flowers framing the rim and a few tucked underneath it at the hairline. It was banded with a thin green ribbon.

Another pretty hat was a lilac straw with turned up brim. There was a cluster of purple, pink and white lilacs on each side, one just above the ear, the other just below.—United Press.

"JUST WON'T EAT"

... A PROBLEM
THAT PERPLEXES MOTHERS

By GARRY CLEVELAND MYERS, M.D.

WHILE, as a rule, the tot co-operates better with his mother, behaves better and is happier, with her alone, there are some cases in which the opposite is true. Now and then someone says of the youngster who will eat heartily and behave almost perfectly for some relative or stranger but will eat poorly and grow stubborn and generally naughty when the mother appears or when he is wholly in her care.

Yet this mother may try very hard. Indeed, her very conscientiousness may prove her greatest hindrance. Being so eager to guide him, well she may grow panicky as she finds her efforts failing. Naturally, the youngster "catches" her nervousness as if it were measles, and it "takes" at once.

EATING PROBLEM

"I am a mother twenty-three and have a boy two and a half years old. Our greatest problem is his eating. He is alert and bright but so full of life that he doesn't want to sit still long enough to eat. He wants to eat only a couple of spoonfuls of breakfast or none at all and little more than that at lunch or dinner. We have tried everything we can think of but nothing works. We've coaxed, whipped and even deprived him of some of the toys but all in vain.

"About a month ago, when I was called out of town, my husband and son stayed with my sister-in-law. She has a much larger house than ours. While there he ate heartily without any protesting and gained two pounds. When I returned and

Household Hints

If your starch is lumpy or not thoroughly cooked it will stick to the iron. If this happens (as it may once in awhile), wipe the iron clean with a damp cloth when just warm, never hot. Or rub it gently over salt spread on paper.

Egg stains on silver may be removed with plain salt.

Test your measuring spoons and cups, if you have two sets, to see if they are quite accurate. Any liquid can be so carefully poured into a cup that it will round up over the top before it spills. Or serve the marks at eye level, and not put the cup on a level surface, not on your hand. Even the line that marks the fractions of a cup has width and should be viewed at its top edge. A standard cup should hold one-half a standard pint of 16 level tablespoons of liquid. A standard tablespoon holds three standard teaspoons of liquid.

A small meat saw will soon pay for itself in saving meat. If you buy a leg of lamb, for instance, cut steaks from it to be broiled, and roast the rest.

PENICILLIN
TROUBLE

By HERMAN N. BUNDESEN,
M.D.

IT is often just a little bit of extra "know-how" that makes all the difference between a real cure and an unsuccessful treatment. For some time now, penicillin solutions of various types have been used for the treatment of chronic running ears and many of them have been disappointing, though, in theory, the penicillin should have done the trick by clearing up the infection in the middle part of the ear from which the discharge seen in such cases comes.

More recently, it has been found that not the penicillin but the water solution in which it was applied was at fault. When the same amounts of penicillin were used in a solution of 35 percent alcohol and 50 percent glycerine, excellent results were obtained.

Number of Advantages

This preparation has a number of advantages. It has no detrimental action on the penicillin. The alcohol and glycerine tend to dry out the tissues, causing shrinking of materials in the ear rather than having the swelling effect of water. In addition, this solution sticks to the tissues and hence keeps the penicillin in contact with the affected area. In carrying out the treatment, the ear is thoroughly cleansed by the physician with a solution of alcohol. The ear canal is then filled with the penicillin-alcohol-glycerine mixture, and it is allowed to remain for about twenty minutes. Some cotton is then put into the ear canal.

Remove Cotton

The patient is instructed to remove the cotton at night before he retires, to cleanse the ear with alcohol solution, then to put in the penicillin preparation, and again to place cotton in the ear canal. The patient is advised to sleep on the side which is not affected. In the morning the treatment is followed for about two weeks; then treatment is discontinued for about one week, and the patient returns to the physician for further treatment and observation.

Within Three Weeks

With this treatment, it is possible to clear up the infection within three weeks, in most cases. In those instances in which the treatment does not seem to be over-coming the infection, the patient uses the penicillin for one week, and then employs a preparation of glycerine of hydrogen peroxide for one week.

Dr. Aubrey G. Rawlings of San Francisco, has found this treatment more effective than any other in cases of chronic running ear which can be cleared up by means other than surgery. Of course, the treatment can only be employed under the direction of the physician in those cases in which he thinks it would be suitable.

Charming Suite Of Rooms

By ELEANOR ROSS

COMFORT and beauty know no politics, so whenever the guest suite of any famous political club gets a going-over, there's always a rush to see it.

The newest job is delightful, for the suite of rooms is virtually a Williamsburg guesthouse, but decorated with an eye to ease and comfort. No room is an exact replica of a Williamsburg room, but there are areas of Colonial Virginia feeling and this is helped out by splendid copies of authentic pieces and accessories.

Another Era

The introduction to another era is superbly done with the foyer setting the pace. One steps off the elevator into a duplication of a Williamsburg street scene with shapboard and store front windows that hold samples of glass, silver and fabrics, reproductions that are well done. A brick "side-walk" helps complete the picture.

The three bedrooms are all beautiful, as is the room that represents the parlour of the famous Raleigh Tavern. We found it interesting that such modernities as the telephone, and electric lighting had been smartly masked or even hidden, or adapted to modern ideas while retaining the proper old-time look. For instance, in the main bedroom there is a curtained and canopied bed that holds within its four posts, two modern twin-sized beds. The bed hangings and the window draperies are of a floral stripe in rose on white, with hand-quilted pillow for the bed spread.

Charming Living Room

The Raleigh parlour makes a charming living room, not at all incongruous with modern ways. The fireplace wall flanked by two arched doorways is paneled in wood, painted in Williamsburg blue, as are the recesses of the two windows opposite. The sofa, on Sheraton lines, is covered with exquisite printed linen, a floral bouquet alternating with a floral stripe in off-white against deep rose.

The soft reds and blues of an exquisite Persian rug go handsomely with the blues panelling and the rose sofa. A graceful arm chair is covered in a linen-like cotton, hand-screened in white on a glowing russet red. The framed prints and the figurines in the fine breakfast secretary all bespeak comfort and a gracious air.

ODD FACTS

An egg whose yolk and white were wrapped around a second complete egg was laid by a hen belonging to a Nebraska man.

In Ardmore, Okla., two prison prisoners escaped from jail by breaking through the wall with a can opener.

At Madison Square Garden, N.Y., recently, two teams of paraplegic war veterans played a basketball game from wheel-chairs.

MAMA MEETS A YOUNG FAN

One way to remember Mama is to get her autograph. And Irene Dunne, who plays the title role in George Stevens' production of "I Remember Mama," will always be remembered by this juvenile admirer. Miss Dunne portrays a Norwegian mother of four children in the RKO Radio production in which she co-stars with Barbara Bel Geddes, Oscar Homolka and Philip Dorn.

A Real English
Dinner

THE British girl at the telephone desk called to me as I passed through the lobby. "Oh, Mrs. Allen, could you spare a minute to help me?" She was quite excited because her best girl friend had just arrived from England.

"And I like to surprise her with a real English dinner, the kind we had before the war. Of course, she'd like a roast joint of beef," she went on.

Very Expensive

I didn't want to dampen her enthusiasm, by reminding her that large roasts of beef are very expensive. So I suggested that she ask the butcher for a thick, two-pound slice of sirloin steak. Sliced thin, across the grain, it would be plenty for one meal, and she wouldn't have the problem of paying for and using up a large expensive roast which would last the week through. It is possible to serve an expensive meal once in a while, even on a limited budget, if enough for one meal only is purchased.

"Be sure to make plenty of gravy," I went on. "And roast some peeled white potatoes in the pan with the meat. Of course, you're planning to have Yorkshire pudding."

"My friend would love that, but I don't know how to make it," the girl confessed. So I gave her the recipe.

Brussels Sprouts

For a second vegetable I suggested Brussels sprouts; if fresh sprouts were not available, fresh frozen sprouts could be used, or broccoli—those thin stalks that appear in many spring markets and look and taste almost like regulation broccoli.

Peaches

"What are you going to have for dessert?" I asked.

"That's easy," the girl laughed. "My friend has already told me that she'd appreciate more than anything some canned peaches."

"You mean canned peaches," I said.

"Yes—they are a great luxury in England," she explained. "And

THE CURE OF WOODWORM

Wherever there is a tiny crack or hole in a piece of furniture, or in the woodwork of your flat, there is a danger of woodworm attacking the wood, laying eggs, and of the progeny spoiling beautiful and valuable furniture. In the past, a remedy against such vermin, which it sells under the name of "P.C.L.", is equally effective against woodworm and the death-watch beetles which grow out of their larvae.

To stamp out this vermin as effectively as possible, the periods of its life and growth should be studied. There are two stages in the year when it is best to use "P.C.L." The first about this season, just before the beetles hatch out, just before the second is in August, when "P.C.L." will deal with any eggs which have not already been destroyed and might otherwise produce live offspring.

Naturally, every one of the woodworm's hiding-places must be treated with the remedy, so that it has no chance of escape.

she likes them served with whipped cream, which is another great treat. And we'll have tea for a beverage."

"How about the first course at dinner?" I inquired.

"In the section of England from which we come, they seldom ever serve anything before the main course. But I've been in the United States long enough to learn to like tomato juice, so we'll serve that with nice crisp biscuits."

"But Mrs. Allen," she went on, "just how shall I bake the Yorkshire pudding? When I was a child, before the war, I remember seeing my mother put a big roast of beef to cook on a rack in a roasting pan. About an hour before it would be done, she used to pour Yorkshire pudding batter into the drippings in the roasting pan. And it would bake right under the meat. I remember it had the most wonderful savory flavour. But I'm going to roast a piece of sirloin steak instead of a big joint, and I haven't any rack to put it on. How can I give that good meaty flavour to my Yorkshire pudding?"

There's an answer to every cooking question, just as there is to most other problems. You'll find the method I gave her fully explained in the recipe for Yorkshire Pudding given in this column.

DINNER

Chilled Tomato Juice

Roast Beef

Select any cut of roast beef desired. But in any case, order it boned and rolled. Porterhouse or sirloin roast will prove the most expensive. However, a piece of brisket, or top round, can be roasted by the quick searing method described here; or for roast beef to serve at just one meal, a thick cut of sirloin steak will prove satisfactory. For a slight garlic flavour, rub the meat all over with a cut section of garlic.

Place the beef on a rack in the roasting pan. Dust with flour, salt and pepper, and roast in a very hot oven, 450 F. for 15 min., or until the flour begins to brown. Reduce the heat to 350 F. and finish roasting, allowing 20 min. to the pound. Baste 3 times with $\frac{1}{2}$ c. hot water in which 2 tsp. meat fat or margarine have been melted.

Roast Sirloin Steak

If a thick cut of sirloin steak is roasted, prepare in the same way, but allow about 30 min. for roasting at a steady temperature of 375 F. for a medium rare roast.

Yorkshire Pudding

Sift together 1 c. all-purpose flour, $\frac{1}{2}$ tsp. salt and $\frac{1}{4}$ tsp. pepper. Add 2 eggs, slightly beaten and mixed with $\frac{1}{2}$ c. milk. Beat until bubbly with a hand beater. Then pour into the pan under the roast beef, 45 min. before the meat will be done. If you have no roasting rack and the beef is placed directly on the bottom of the pan, bake the Yorkshire pudding in a separate 8" x 8" oiled pan, basting twice with drippings from the meat.

TRICK OF THE CHEF

To give cooked broccoli or Brussels sprouts a very nice taste, combine with an equal amount of coarse-diced celery, cooked until barely tender, and season with browned butter.

BEATING THE CRIME WAVE:

PRISONS EXPERT
ATTACKS '28 DAYS'
FOR 'TOUGH EGGS'

Book of the Day by GORDON SEWELL

THE "Mikado" comic opera policy of "making the punishment fit the crime" is blamed by barrister Leo Page as the main reason why 10,000 out of the 25,000 men jailed each year have been in prison before.

These persistent offenders—who keep busy the policemen who should be working today on major crimes—have dreary records of small crimes and pointless punishments.

In "The Sentence of the Court" (Faber, 10s. 6d.), Mr. Page, who is a Home Office adviser and county J.P., attacks the policy of rule-of-thumb sentences which to a large degree ignore the personal history of the prisoner.

He gives this life record of an "old lag" of 50, who is in prison for stealing cloth—his 42nd sentence.

As a boy, this prisoner was sent to an industrial school for truancy. He became a labourer. In 1914 he joined the Army under an assumed name. Demobilised in 1918 with a "Very Bad" military character, he became a tramp—and a petty criminal.

How it began

In the intervals between prison sentences he roamed the countryside, making mats which he sometimes sold. According to his own story he worked when he got the chance. But he never stayed long in any single job.

His first punishment was seven days' hard labour for stealing wallpaper. A year later he did three months' for stealing overcoats. Then nine months for housebreaking and larceny.

He went on stealing. To theft he added fraud, assault, wilful damage, drunkenness.

Never a big crime—he hadn't that much intelligence. And because the crimes were small the sentences were short, the longest being 21 months. But 13 years of his life have been spent behind the bars.

This man and his record of sentences are typical says Mr. Page.

Mr. Page's moral? That the system of repeated short sentences is a failure on three counts—

- 1 IT IS NOT DETERRENT. Thus, in 1944, this man is convicted five times and his prison sentences add up to ten and a half months in a single year.
- 2 IT IS NOT REFORMATORY. At the age of 58 he was committing exactly the same sort of offences as those with which he began his criminal career at the age of 32.
- 3 IT IS NOT PREVENTIVE. Despite 42 prison sentences, he is still enabled to commit a large number of crimes.

More facts

Mr. Page's cure? Long sentences (three to five years) at an early stage when the danger signals begin to flash. Inhuman? No. Because in prison "the old hardness and brutality... have rightly gone." Because this way the criminal can be turned into a good citizen.

Mr. Page also criticises the prison system—not for pushing men down, but for failing to lift them up. For this he blames the judges of the higher courts who "commit men to prison for periods too short for reformatory methods to be effective."

Judges, he urges, should know something of the men they are sentencing—besides their police records. Case-histories should include data about health, intelligence, family, associates, recreations and work.

Only then will it be possible to treat each offender as a separate human problem—and give policemen time to beat the bigger criminals.

UNREST AMONG LONDON STATUES (Copyright in All Countries)

TRIESTE: THE TOWN THAT TITO WANTED

THE prosperous looking Trieste cafe proprietor shook me warmly by the hand. Never before had we set eyes on one another but to him I, an Englishman, was a friend.

The sun-tanned working man lounging in the doorway gave a contemptuous look. To him I was something of an interloper in the narrow path which he wanted to traverse.

In that scene you have a picture of contemporary feeling in this apparently gay city where food fills the restaurants, clothing the shops, wine the cafes and suspicion the air.

Economically the people who walk the Via del Corso have greater purchasing freedom than the Englishman who strolls in London's Oxford Street, but politically they are in a stranglehold.

For a long time they have waited with apprehension for the arrival of the man who could bring badly needed peace to this city.

Under the terms of the original Italian Peace Treaty, the appointment of a governor to the international zone would have meant the arrival of a strong man to settle the upsets and let democratic government work its way to the surface without too much bloodshed. He could not have been an Englishman, American, Italian or Yugoslav—the Treaty banned these nationalities—but it was thought in Trieste he might have been a Norwegian.

No Strong Man

HE would have arrived to find the Union Jack and Stars and Stripes flying from the main buildings and the sign of the hammer and sickle painted on the smaller ones. He would have found the Italian middle classes ready to cheer him and the Slovene peasantry preparing to demonstrate in anger. For international Trieste is almost cosmopolitan, and at least two native languages cut across the streets in disharmony.

No man to fill the bill has been found. Strong men cannot be picked up at a moment's notice, and even if they could, it now seems the moment has passed.

The coast road, which edges its way along the Adriatic from the direction of Venice, leaves the flatness of the Italian plains for the barren but more majestic beauty of hill Venezia Giulia that wedge of land which divides Yugoslavia from the Italian mainland.

For centuries possession of Giulia has been disputed by central European powers. After the breakdown of the Roman Empire it suffered the general fortune of Istria, and Trieste underwent a more or less independent existence until its capture by Venice in 1202.

For the next 180 years the port suffered repeated conflicts with the Italian city until the whole area came under Leopold of Austria in 1382. Apart from odd moments of independence, so it remained until 1914. Together with Fiume, it was the main outlet to the Mediterranean for the old Austro-Hungarian Empire, its growth jealously watched by Italy.

Venezia Giulia

AFTER World War One, victorious Serbia gained control of those states which today form the new Yugoslavia, but under the Treaty of Rapallo in 1921 Venezia Giulia, with its large Slovene peasantry, passed to Italy, to become forever a thorn in the side of Yugoslavia.

The Italians took a census, which showed that out of 920,150 inhabitants there were 531,987 Italians, 92,000 Serbo-Croats, 250,044 Slovenes, 4,185 Austrians and 32,234 other nationals. The Yugoslavs disputed the figures, and today they still claim 600,000 Slovenes under Italian rule.

From the start of their new ownership, the Italians suppressed all Slovene national, political, religious and cultural activities, and it became an offence to speak Slovene and Croat languages.

Mussolini wasted no time in extending this persecution despite repeated protests from Yugoslavia, and when that country collapsed early in this last war, he extended his Fascist methods into Yugoslav lands.

In 1941 the Yugoslav peasantry rose, and in the form of the Slovene National Liberation Front, began organised resistance to the Italians. This resistance was later extended to the Germans when they occupied the area, where they hurriedly appointed non-Fascist Italians and quelling Croats to the official posts.

By 1943 it became obvious to the onlooking world that this underground rising was based on the Communist hierarchy established by Tito in Yugoslavia, whose decrees were passed down to the liberation committees in towns and villages. It was not surprising that they met opposition. Anti-Fascist elements from Italy were springing up, although not with the same degree or high-powered organisation.

BY PETER LAWRENCE

Moreover, they were divided into two camps—the Garibaldi partisans and the Osoppo—but they did form an opposition in the early days. However, the Garibaldi, being Communist, eventually walked over to Tito, leaving the Osoppo, who were backed by the Italian Action, Socialist, Liberal and Christian Democratic parties, to fend for themselves.

While this was happening the staunch, battle-hardened but victorious troops of the Fifth and Eighth Armies advanced into northern Italy, ready to occupy Venezia, still technically Italian, only to find Tito's men in possession.

In public Tito had announced that no Yugoslav claims would be made until the peace conference, but privately a lot of "arranging" to Tito's benefit had been going on.

The Yugoslav National Council had ratified resolutions passed by the Slovene and Croat liberation committees that the provinces of Gorizia, Trieste and Istria be incorporated into Yugoslavia, despite the fact that the populations of the ports of Trieste and Fiume were mainly Italian.

1945 Meeting

FIELD Marshal Alexander, leading the Allied advance in Italy, decided he must settle matters straightened out with Tito, and in February 1945, they met. It was agreed that the Allies would occupy the Trieste area, and that the Military Government would operate, using the existing Yugoslav administration where it proved efficient.

It was also agreed that the Allies would have the use of certain routes into Austria. Meanwhile, the troops of both sides battled on against the Germans. Tito's general staff claimed the fall of Trieste on April 30, although for some strange reason his radio was still calling on the Trieste to rise as late as May 1.

About that time New Zealand troops, headed by the British Army's 12th Royal Lancers, crossed the River Isonzo into "liberated" Venezia Giulia to fight clashes with German outposts. At Monfalcone the surrender was received of 7,000 prisoners, and by May 3 part of Trieste city was occupied.

Our men found Tito's everywhere, and there were armed relationships, not only between them and the inhabitants, but between the British and Eastern Allies as well.

Their methods were not unlike those of the Russians in liberated cities. The Italian Council of National Liberation, composed of underground workers who had struck hard at the Germans, were waiting in the city hall to greet the Yugoslav soldiers. They were immediately disbanded, and many arrests were made. That was the start of what the Trieste call the 40 days' terror. Some 10,000 Italians were deported to Yugoslavia; there were robberies and rapes, and generally the people wished "liberation" had something more peaceful about it.

To Belgrade went General Morgan, Alexander's Chief of Staff, to confirm the agreement between the Field Marshal and Tito, to find himself up against a brick wall. Tito, having "conquered" Venezia Giulia, had decided to go back on his promises and to agree only to use of lines of communication from Italy into Austria.

Protests followed from the British and American Governments, and a few days later Alexander himself went to Belgrade on what proved to be a fruitless mission. In Trieste, meanwhile, Yugoslav armour—such as it was—paraded the streets, presumably with the intention of letting the people know who was boss. No sooner had the column passed than a British armoured car would appear, and everyone felt much happier.

Police Busy Again

It is only when agitators become too bold to curbed, but as some of the demonstrators are Italians, whose activities were severely quashed under Yugoslav jurisdiction, their feelings can be appreciated.

No sooner have subsided, however, than the Slovene element come out to demonstrate against the Italians, and the police have to get busy again. But these police have brought a form of justice hitherto unknown in Venezia Giulia—a justice not always appreciated by the Tito press. In this they are not alone. Allied troops and the military police in particular are continually labelled.

When they are called upon to break up a Communist disturbance they are accused of Gestapo methods, of letting the guilty go free and ill-treating the innocent Slovenes. On the other side, the Italian press has developed a craze for printing lurid stories of the alleged behaviour of British and American troops with Italian girls. In point of fact, both British and American troops who go on well together, behave well in Giulia, and where the press has come under the control of the Military Government action has been taken.

Before many weeks passed, it became obvious that the administrative officials Tito had left behind to work the British and Americans were inefficient, and their services

After a good deal of pressure from high Allied levels, agreement was reached. Venezia Giulia, it was decided, would be divided into two zones; on one side of the dividing line—the Morgan line—would be our men, and on the other all of Tito's, less a few thousand who would come under the Allied Military Commander.

On June 13, 1945, the Allied Military Government moved into Trieste, and to the profound relief of the population, the Yugoslav troops moved out. The 40 days' "terror" was over.

What Do You Think Of Love—In This Heat?

BY RALPH SHAW

IN any place that has a respectable climate, a young person's fancy is now turning to empyreal thoughts of love. Here, of course, the average swimmer at this time of the year is more concerned with the clinging qualities of his precious bottle of prickly heat lotion than he is with the charm of local damsels. And, if the local belles possess Oomph (which, indeed, they do), he's far too busy trying to remove the itch from his midriff to notice it to any marked degree. All of which is lamentable 'cos there's nothing like love to make the world go round and, at the same time, to dispel all thoughts about the high cost of living.

As an expert on the symptoms of lovelessness which, like measles, is easy to catch and difficult to get rid of, I shall tell you how to recognise those poor mortals who have been well and truly bitten by the love bug.

First of all there's the young male. He walks as if he is in a daze—which, on second thoughts, he undoubtedly is. Notice his eyes. They have a fixed, glassy stare, something like a kipper on a fishmonger's slab—only not so intelligently illuminated. His hair has not been combed for days. His socks are odd. His shirt's on back to front. He's muttering to himself. Ah! he's just walked under a bus. And he's still staring—a little more glassy this time. He's probably the unrequited type, reduced by the machinations of his innamorata to a state of all drip and no dryness. This type is dangerous. It bites when necosed. Leave it severely alone.

Take that young damsel over there in the corner, busily filling her tea cup from the flower vase in the centre of the table. She's got it badly. Can you hear her sigh? Horrible, isn't it? Just look at her now. Why, she's spread her sandwiches on her lap and is chewing the table napkin! Doesn't notice it, though. Sure sign. She's the wistful type. Just sighs like a zephyr all day and thinks of that burly, big brute who's teaching her how to swim.

AND there's the secretarial type. When they get bitten, then watch your correspondence. Here's an example of a letter to Mr Long-Overview typed by a damsel suffering the pangs of spring fever:

"Darling Mr Long-Overview—It has come to our notice Darling Harry that your account for ten copies of Darling Harry supplied by Darling Harry on the tenth of last month has probably escaped your attention Darling Harry. We should be grateful if you would kindly send a cheque to Darling Harry without delay as the present cost of Darling Harry is terrific—Yours forever Ambergreen."

But you can't guess the name of her boy friend. Henry is right!

And then there's the type that goes either Tithery—or poe! You know the sort of things: "Roses are red, violets are blue, you love me and I love you." Well, isn't it? Or this one: "Malsie, Malsie, I am hazy. Malsie, Malsie, I drive me crazy. Malsie, Malsie, I love you way-sie. Malsie, Malsie, see me today-sie. And so on ad nauseum. That slight frown you heard was Will Shakespeare turning around to have a look at the poet.

And then there's the big he-man type who beats his chest like King Kong whenever his passion fruit appears. They should use him as a noise off in the next earthquake sequence at M.G.M. Look, he's up a tree now. Wonderful what spring gives a person! He'll probably batter himself senseless before the night's over. And so we'd better leave him up a tree with his rippling muscles sticking out like chapel hat-pegs.

THEN there's the type that goes all introspective and mutters to himself all day long. He's probably reciting his proposal, something like this:

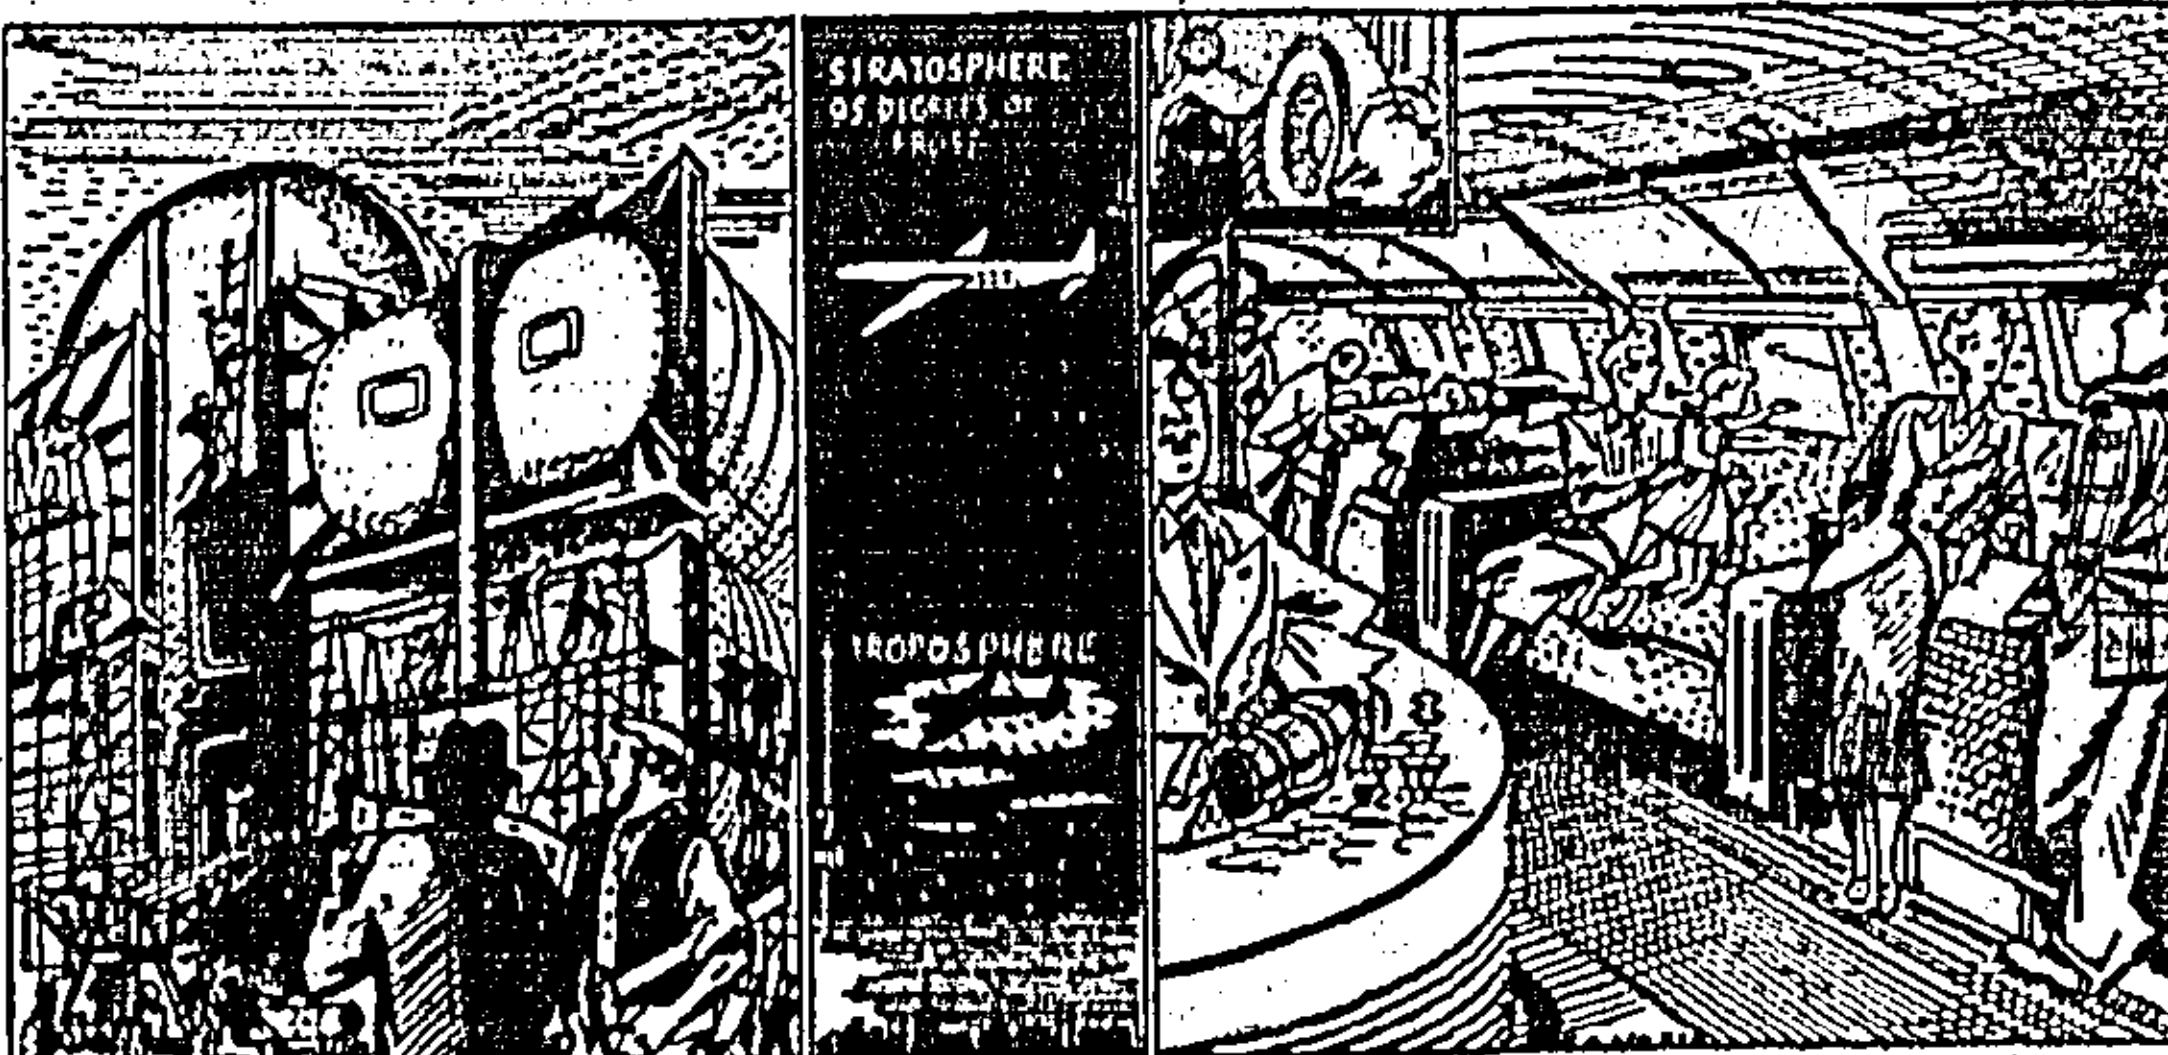

"Darling—or should I say Dearest? It doesn't matter much. Or does it? Well, I'll compromise and say Sweetest. Ah! that's nice. Sweetest, you have made me sick. Now, I wonder if she'll take offence at that. Perhaps I'd better say Sweetest, you have not made me sick. . . . And so he dribbles to himself all day long. And, when the right moment comes to pop the question, he says—precisely nothing!

But, after all, love is a wonderful thing. It has launched ships, they tell me. There's certainly enough grease on some of our women's face to oil the slipways! And it's won battles—and lost 'em! That last remark was most uncalled for, Mr. Schickelgruber.

But love can be horrible, too. Just take the Praying Mantis with the wonderful appetite for husbands. Poor saps, they line up in rows to woo her and what happens? She eats 'em, one by one as they come forward. And still they queue up. Deals me.

It's now time to rub on my prickly heat lotion, so I'll pipe down and give somebody else a chance to get some news into the paper.

Dam-buster Wallis is building a sky-lab at Brooklands

CHAPMAN PINCHER explains . . . What Goes On Inside

1 BIGGEST of its kind in the world, the laboratory is a steel tank fitted with powerful air-drying, refrigerating, and vacuum devices, which reproduce conditions prevailing 35 miles up. The stratosphere is the ideal flying zone for jet planes, for it is free from storms or lightning. There is so little moisture that planes cannot ice up, and wind resistance is much smaller. But the air there is too thin for man and too cold to sustain human life. So the cabin of the stratosphere airliner will have to be a sealed chamber controlling its own air conditions.

2 PRESSURISED CABINS are not new. But flight in the stratosphere presents special problems. Just as the air inside an inflated tyre forces its way through a weak spot, so the oxygen in a pressurised cabin tries to escape into space. To design cabins safe enough for the stratosphere is a vital step toward the super-speed air travel of the future. With the discoveries they will make in the stratosphere laboratory the Wallis team hope to put Britain ahead in the race with America.

How It Is That Swimmers Are So Fast Today

An Australian Takes The Credit For Faster Times

San Francisco.

Officials of the Amateur Athletic Union were happy that it took under 52 seconds to qualify for the final of the 100-yard freestyle race at the recent American indoor men's championships. Also pleasing to them were the times of 50.4s. and 50.5s. made by Walter Ris of the University of Iowa in defense of his title in the final.

In addition, the performance of Marie Cortlond of the Women's Swimming Association of New York in winning the 100-yard freestyle indoor title at Daytona Beach, Florida, in 59.9s. was pleasing.

Ris' time of 50.4s. is almost 38 seconds faster than that registered by A. F. Comacho of the New York Manhattan Athletic Club in winning the first 100-yard American outdoor championship in 1883. Also, Miss Cortlond's 59.9s. is 8.9s. faster than Olga Dorfner (Philadelphia Turngemeinde) registered in capturing the first American indoor 100-yard title in 1916.

Not mentioned by the officials was the fact that the improvement in American freestyle competitive swimming since 1883 was due principally to an incident that occurred here in San Francisco in 1903. That year the directors of The Olympic Club engaged Sydney Cavill of Sydney, Australia, to coach the Olympian swimmers. The American record for the 100 yards in 1900 was 55.6-108, and the world record, 1 minute, made by J. H. Derbyshire of England, Nov. 2, 1897.

TRUDGEN TO CRAWL

Within six months after Cavill changed Scott Leary from the trudgen stroke to the Australian crawl, he lowered the American record to 52.2-5s.

During a tour of the Midwest cities in 1902, Leary won 17 consecutive races and in 1903 became the first American to swim the 100 yards in 52.2-5s.

Charles H. Doolittle of the New York Athletic Club studied the Australian crawl as demonstrated by Leary, evolved from it what is now known as the American crawl and in 1908 started the slashing by Americans of the world record for the distance.

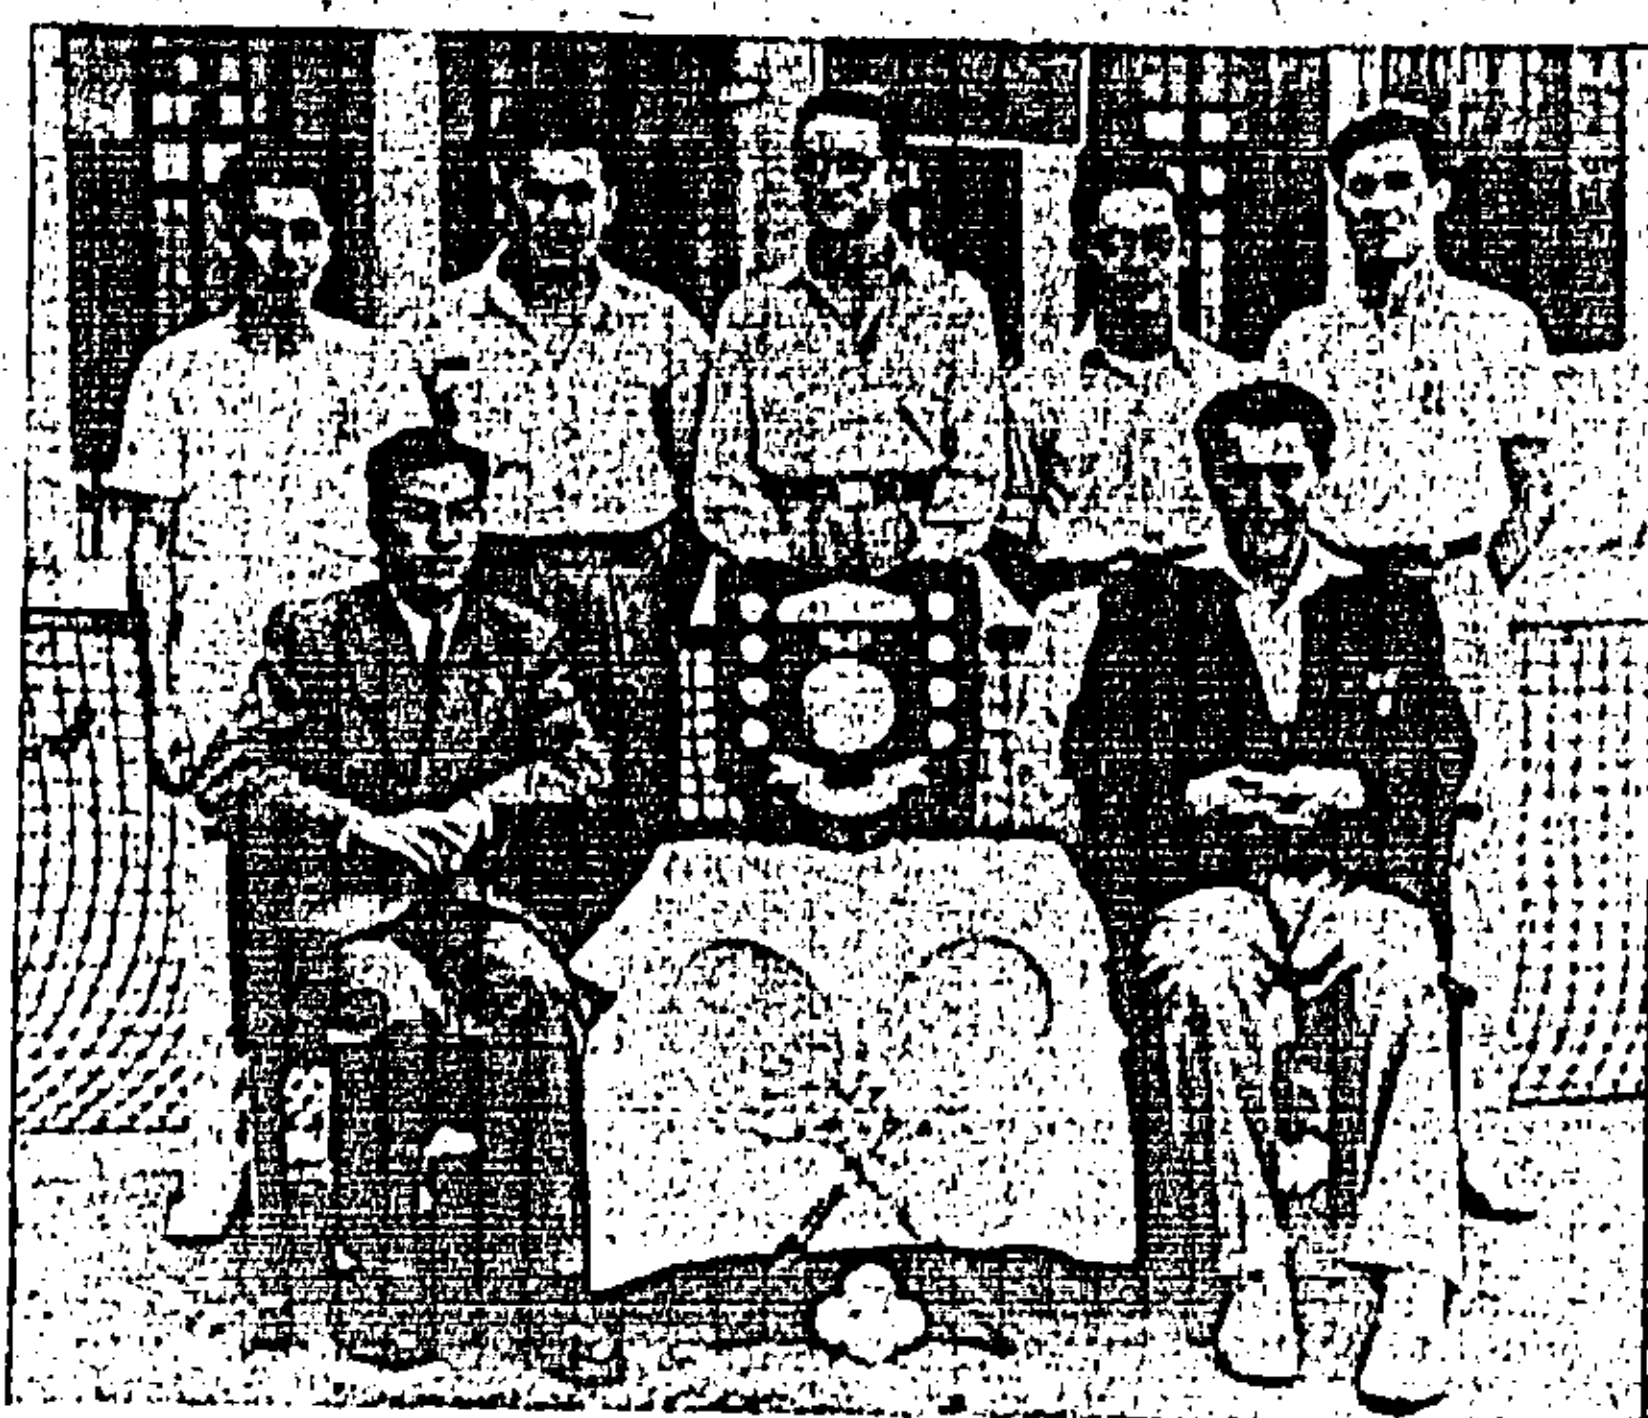

First tying the world record of 57.0s. on Feb. 22, he lowered it by 1.6s. on March 22 of the same year. Sept. 7, 1907, he placed the record at 55.4s. and at 54.3s. April 7, 1910, Duke Kahanamoku, swimming the American crawl, followed Daniels and by Sept. 5, 1917, had lowered the world's record to 53s. A fellow Hawaian, Pua Kealoha, tied Kahanamoku's record Aug. 1, 1921, and then John Weissmuller began his six-year reign as freestyle champion of the world. By April 6, 1927, Weissmuller had lowered the record to 51s. This time was tied by Peter Fick, April 2, 1930, Howard Johnson, Feb. 11, 1942, William Prew, April 4, 1942, and Alan Ford on Aug. 14 of the same year.

SYSTEMATIC ATTACK

On Jan. 30, 1943, Ford began a systematic attack on the record of 51s. which had stood for almost 16 years and lowered it to 50.7s. Feb. 13 he dropped it to 50.6s. Jan. 29, 1944, he placed it at 50.1s. and on March 18 of the same year established the present mark of 49.7s. Showing this was no fluke, he duplicated that time on March 25 and on Feb. 17, 1945, swam the distance in 49.4s., a time that has not yet been accepted as the world record.

IT MAY LEAD TO AN OLYMPIC QUARREL, FOR

SWEDISH ATHLETES MAY REFUSE TO SIGN NEW AMATEUR DECLARATION

SAYS HAROLD PALMER

Anyone who believe the Olympic Games can be held without argument will soon be disillusioned. The first one will come before the Games, and the new wording of the amateur declaration will cause it.

I am told that some of the Swedish athletes will refuse to sign.

Failure to sign would exclude them from the Games, but I sense a determination on the part of the leading international officials to stand firm.

"They want the best of both worlds," was the comment of a leading official. "They cannot have it both ways. Either they are amateurs according to the Olympic definition or they are not."

Swedish point of view is different. They argue, not without reason, that no successful amateur could honestly sign the declaration and that they refuse to commit perjury.

New wording was fixed by a special committee that met in 1946. On that committee were Mr. Avery Brundage (U.S.A.), Mr. Eklund (Sweden), former secretary of the International Athletic Federation, and the new secretary, Mr. E. J. Holt, as well as Mr. Seeldrayers, Belgian football administrator.

The old declaration was brief and to the point.

"I, the undersigned, declare on my honour that I am an amateur according to the Olympic rules of amateurism and that I fulfill the conditions required by the Olympic rules."

The new style is more searching. Here it is:

"I, the undersigned, declare on my honour that I am an amateur according to the rules of the international federation governing my sport and that I have never knowingly transgressed such rules and that I have participated in sport solely for pleasure and for the physical, mental or social benefit I derive therefrom; that sport to me is nothing more than a recreation without material gain of any kind, direct or indirect, and that I am eligible in all respects for participation in the Olympic Games."

What amateur can say on his honour that his sport had brought him no material gain, direct or indirect?

LET THEM ALL COME

The Swedes would like the Games to include everyone, whatever they gain from their sport. That seems attractive enough — an "Open" Games. But that means professionalism, and I agree with a British official, who pointed out to me that professionalism in running sports must mean betting.

Anyway, the suggestion has been made to me that if the Swedes were excluded through their unwillingness to sign, they would object to any other runners taking part whose freedom from the taint of professionalism was at all in doubt.

Before the European Games at Oslo the Swedes raised objections to Viljo Heino, Finnish distance runner, but withdrew them at the last minute.

Belgians Deserved Their First Cross-country Victory

SAYS SYDNEY SKILTON

Reading, England.

For the first time Belgium occupies the role of champion among the nations who annually contest the international cross country championship. In the 1948 race decided at Leighton Park, here, the Belgians won the Lumley Shield, emblematic of supremacy, by the narrowest possible margin of one point from the holder-nation, France. For the first time, too, Belgium provided the individual winner.

He was John Doms, a postwar product who appears to have very bright prospects in future long distance races. Doms took the lead during the first of the three testing laps, each of approximately three miles, and when crossing the finish line had established a gap of about 120 yards over his nearest rival. This was a compatriot, Emile Renson, who finished about the same distance ahead of the third man, Ben Mohamed Lahoussine, a French Moroccan runner.

Victory for the Belgians came as a reward for persistent endeavour in his race in which they have been represented every time since 1923. Before the war they could finish no higher than third but in the two postwar races prior to the one here they were runners-up to France.

Pivot around which the Belgian cross country enthusiasm has revolved is Mr. Ed Herne, a newspaperman of Brussels where, incidentally, the international championship is to be held next year. In fairness to the French, however, it should be pointed out that for the 1948 race they were without the services of their champion, Raphael Pujazon who decided to stand down in view of his preparation for the Olympic steeplechase in August.

With Pujazon the French might well have won especially as they placed five men among the first 10 home. Their vital sixth scorer was seventeenth which meant they aggregated 47 points against Belgium's 46. JACK HOBBS SAYS

The Odds Are On The Touring Side

While we are busy weighing up the Australians, and thinking about—but not choosing—the men we can put in the field against them in Test matches, it should be remembered that the odds are on the touring side.

There are certain advantages resting with them. They have only seventeen men—or rather sixteen, because a reserve wicket-keeper is in the number—from whom to select their Test eleven.

We have many more possible players—and in numbers there is confusion. Judging from what I have seen up to now, there will be no necessity for the Australian manager to send an SOS home for a player or two.

TOGETHER AS TEAM

The side looks to me well equipped in the all-round sense. The players are also running into form.

There are other advantages to a touring side. They get together as a team, whereas if we introduce a number of new players into the England side they will certainly not be a team, in the full sense, in the first Test.

With the 17 players at his command the Australian captain and his co-selectors is giving his men a rest roughly once in three matches. It will not have escaped notice that the Australian captain is nursing his fast bowlers, Ray Lindwall especially. He can do this without undue risk because he has plenty of other good bowlers—spinners particularly.

In contrast our men have to keep going, day after day, in county matches which may demand their bowling for long spells, or several spells.

Consider the difference. In the way Lindwall and Alec Bedser were used in the Australians v. Surrey game. Our other pace bowlers—the men we need to get the Australians out—will have the same experience, "howling their hearts out" in match after match. If they remain fresh it will be a miracle.

As against the sixteen Australians from whom the team will be chosen we have lots of possibilities—so many that they become almost an embarrassment.

Here I may reply to many correspondents—from whom I like to hear, of course—asking me to set down my England team now. I'm not doing it—yet.

Rather let us wait for it, wait for more reliable evidence. For the moment, such evidence as we have only adds to the confusion. Len Hutton started the season with some small scores. That did not worry me.

I did not cross him off. Len has run into form, as a player of his class was bound to do.

It is so easy to manufacture problems, and goodness knows we have enough of them without making more.

CAPTAINCY PROBLEM

As yet neither Bill Edrich nor

Denis Compton has threatened to get a thousand runs in this month of May. They are still stand-bys in our minds, however—or should be. The men who are taking wickets are not necessarily England players. The conditions just now may suit their type of bowling specially, but those conditions may not obtain at Trent Bridge on June 10.

I repeat, wait for it. Don't pick our team from day to day, otherwise men who ought to be in will be out, and men who should not be in will be there.

What we have to do, at an earlier stage than naming our Test eleven, is to find a captain. Even this question has been confused by Norman Yardley's lumbago. If the lumbago vanishes, and Yardley strikes his form, he is the obvious choice, but the captain must be worth his place in the side for sheer cricket ability.

I am not dropping Yardley, but there are other amateurs who come up for consideration—Bill Edrich, for example.

IS EXPERIENCE VITAL?

It is said that Edrich lacks experience as a skipper. Without suggesting that experience is other than a valuable asset, I think it possible to over-estimate this point.

Captains can always sift the advice of other experienced players on the side. Our best captains have always done so.

The point about choosing a captain as early as possible is that the team of selectors is thereby strengthened. The selected captain can discuss likely players with them, and, believe me, selectors do listen to their appointed skipper.
